

Shamley Green Birds

Have you seen the first swallow or chiffchaff of the year or the tawny owlets?

The Environment Group is trying to improve the recording of biodiversity in Shamley Green. The tree, wild-flower and amphibian groups are recording what they find. A study of invertebrates by a professional entomologist will start in May. And we have a new group starting to record bird species seen in the village and its surrounds. All of this should help us to provide evidence-based advice for future projects and will be recorded on the environment group website, currently being prepared. If you would like to help recording birds, please contact Jim Drummond (jim.drummond4@btinternet.com)
